

The Wyckoff farmhouse was built between about 1652 and 1819. It is the oldest house in New York City and is the only structure still standing that was built before New York became a British colony in 1664. The house was restored in 1982. Today, it is a national and New York City historic landmark and operates as a museum.

